RE THE REPORTS OF PEOPLE BRACING FOR a terrorist attack [Oct. 8]: A waitress at my local diner had a Middle Eastern man escorted out because he made her uncomfortable. Listening to the radio, I heard a woman say she is going to buy an expensive couch because it's the only way she knows how to help the country. I believe the U.S. has become a nation of idiots. Gas masks won't help, nor will flying that American flag you just bought. We as a people need to concentrate on what's important: peace, love and equality.

I TOOK COMFORT IN READING ABOUT THE extreme difficulties of using chemical or biological weapons in an attack on the public. But I couldn't shake the thought of how a similarly reassuring article describing the unlikely odds of simultaneous, multiple-airplane hijackings could have been written just a few short weeks ago. There is one inescapable fact that we all must take away from the events of Sept. 11: if something can be thought of, it can be done.

MORE PEOPLE ARE REACHING OUT TO friends and family, singing patriotic songs, giving money, donating blood, praying and doing anything possible to help others. That it took a tragedy for people to forget themselves and remember family, freedom and God is a sad commentary on Americans. Maybe we have learned something from this. Do I want to return to the selfishness and complacency of a "normal" life? No!

I DREAM when I think about the events of Sept. 11 until the slightest prelude to the actual event. I have a fear of the unknown. I have a fear of the unknown. I have a fear of the unknown.

IF I AM ASKED for proof of the existence of the Islamic religion, I will not be able to provide it. I will not be able to provide it. I will not be able to provide it.
